

FINSBURY SQUARE

Celebrating LGBTQ+ Pride Month June 2024

It's time for colours, celebration, & diversity!
At 10 Finsbury Square, we are celebrating Pride; a month of people coming together to recognise how far LGBTQ+ rights have come and advocate for the continued support for equality and acceptance of the LGBTQ+ community.

1969

Stonewall Uprising, New York

In the USA, during the 1960s, homosexuality was a criminal offence. LGBTQ+ people could not openly exist without the constant threat of brutality and harassment by law enforcement and general society. Very few spaces were safe for trans and gay people to exist, so establishments like Stonewall Inn, although not gay-owned, were pivotal within the LGBTQ+ community for free expression. It catered to an assortment of patrons, but it was known to be popular with the poorest and most marginalized people in the gay community: drag queens, sex workers, representatives of a newly self-aware transgender community, effeminate men, and homeless youth.

On 28 June 1969 at 1:20 am, nine police officers stormed the Stonewall Inn on Christopher Street, Manhattan and aggressively searched the bar's patrons. They demanded identification and arrested anyone suspected of being gay or dressing 'illegally'. Police raids on gay bars during this time were frequent and not unusual, but on this night the patrons did not respond with the expected compliance and instead, the growing crowd fought back. This rebellion led to what is known as the Stonewall Uprising or Rebellion – six consecutive nights of protests by the gay residents of Greenwich Village against the New York City Police. The actions of this rebellion changed the face of gay and lesbian activism in the United States, which led to weeks and months of politically active social groups campaigning for the rights of gay people and establishing places for gays and lesbians to be open about their sexual orientation without fear of being arrested.

Christopher Street Liberation Day, New York City

On the first anniversary of the Stonewall Uprising, the first Gay Pride March was held in New York City. The very first U.S. Gay Pride Week and March was meant to give the community a chance to gather together to, "...commemorate the Christopher Street Uprisings of last summer in which thousands of homosexuals went to the streets to demonstrate against centuries of abuse....from government hostility to employment and housing discrimination, Mafia control of Gay bars, and anti-Homosexual laws" (Christopher Street Liberation Day Committee Fliers, Franklin Kameny Papers).

Emboldened with visibility and growing clout, gay activists began to push for legal protections.

In 1974 a measure was introduced in the New York City Council banning discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. It took many decades of social justice activity for political change to happen. Eventually, the measure was finally adopted in 1986.

1972

First Gay Pride March, UK

In commemoration of the Stonewall Uprising and Christopher St Liberation Day, on 1 July 1972 a 'carnival parade' of protest organised by The London Gay Liberation Front (GLE) was held from Hyde Park to Trafalgar Square, London. The GLE was a powerful political organisation that fought for lesbian and gay equality.

In the UK, homosexuality had been partially decriminalised by the Sexual Offences Act 1967 a few years earlier. Yet, thousands of people continued to be persecuted. There had been many smaller-scale protests about sexual inequalities; but the 1972 march was the first to be formally billed as 'Gay Pride' in a UK city. Many gay rights organisations took part, including the Campaign for Homosexual Equality (CHE), with an estimated 2,000 attendees at this heavily policed event.

Because same-sex relationships were still largely viewed as morally and criminally incorrect in the UK, the march was part of a week-long demonstration for London Pride, which involved many political activities, such as 'think-ins', Gay Weeks, and 'kiss-ins'. Peter Tatchell, one of the organisers, said: "Our aim was to show that we were proud, not ashamed. Determined to come out of the shadows and stand up for our rights, we wanted to make ourselves visible and demand LGBT liberation."

London Pride

Pride in London celebrates the diversity of the LGBT+ communities with the colourful Pride in London Parade, as well as free festivity events that take place in Trafalgar Square. This event brings together people of all genders, ethnicities, sexualities, and races.

One of the longest-running pride festivals in the country and largest, Pride in London boasts an estimated 30,000 participants and attracts an estimated 1.5 million visitors.

The festival's events and exact location within London vary every year, however, the parade is the only annual event to close London's iconic Oxford Street.

“The rainbow flag is a symbol of freedom and liberation that we made for ourselves.”

Gilbert Baker

1978

Gilbert Baker's Rainbow Flag

While at the Winterland Ballroom, an iconic music venue in San Francisco, Gilbert Baker, artist, designer and activist, was inspired by the vibrancy of makeup and fashions worn by fellow patrons as they all danced together. He described the experience as "a swirl of colour and light. It was like a rainbow." Baker collaborated with his friend Lynn Segerblom (also known as Faerie Argyle Rainbow) to design the rainbow-striped flag with eight colours: Hot Pink – Sex, Red – Life, Orange – Healing, Yellow – Sunlight, Green – Nature, Turquoise – Magic, Blue – Serenity and Violet – Spirit.

The flag colours adapted over the years due to fabric supply and logistics. By 1979, the iconic rainbow flag was adapted to the six-colour flag that is widely celebrated today: red, orange, yellow, green, blue, and violet.

Many LGBTIQ+ flags have been created - some have evolved, while others are constantly being conceptualized and created.

2018

Daniel Quasar's Progress Pride Flag

Created in 2018 by nonbinary artist Daniel Quasar, the Progress Pride flag is based on the iconic 1978 rainbow flag. With stripes of black and brown to represent marginalized LGBTIQ+ people of colour and the triad of blue, pink, and white from the trans flag, the design represents diversity and inclusion. Many LGBTIQ+ flags have been created - some have evolved, while others are constantly being conceptualized and created.
